Foreword

Most of the words and vocabularies recorded in this book pertaining to each subject, one or two were experiences of my own, and the rest those of boys and girls who were school mates of mine from Primary to University level of education.

From my own learning experience no students, parent or even a guardian who feels good comfortable to see his son or daughter failing in his or her examinations but rather they all feel good when their children are showing positivity in class room test, end of month examinations, mid-term examinations, annual examinations and even National examinations, good performance in schools that is the goal of both parents and students.

There is no point in beginning something without ambition. In so many aspects of my life I have held to that notion, and it has led to more than one fiery crash through the years. In my learning journey I still recall, with bitterness and sweetness that I gained in trying to prove my positive academic performance while at school.

Sometimes I failed and sometimes I passed with shinning marks, same applied to my school mates. Passing with flying colors was our first priority but failing was not supposed to be mentioned only because we never prayed for that, though sometimes we kept on failing.

Vocabularies used to frame questions and examination techniques in attending those questions are what led us to failing those examinations, it is not that we were not smart but vocabularies used were smarter than us. Same applies to your child he or she is not failing because they are tabularasas “No” but he or she is failing because of the vocabularies used in framing such examinations.

I wrote this Subject Dictionary so as to help your child create them with knowledge on how to tackle and understand the vocabularies which are being used by teachers in framing examinations, but also to create your child with the confidence in attending and facing different examinations. Not only that but also this book will help either a guardian or parent while helping their children while attending home works or different academic works while at home.

I hope this book will be of use to you
